

Abstract of the Invention

A method for designing ophthalmic lenses, including progressive addition lenses, and lenses produced by the method are provided. The method permits the 5 direct correlation of an individual's subjective assessment of the lens' performance and the objective measure of lens performance relative to the individual. The method permits generation of lens designs based on the head and eye movement of the individual and the designing of customized lenses.